and advancing personalized initiatives, such as “engineering better tomorrow” in the next few decades – challenges that demand the support of the public, the university, and industry.

The college has significantly improved in national rankings in the last few years as well. "I'm very proud of our faculty and students," he said. "We've made it a priority to spread the word by way of our Communication and Marketing Office, the Aspen Institute and ASQ World Conference in Milwaukee.

For Tech, events like the ASQ World Conference offer a chance to spread the word about WVU Tech to professionals in industry and academia.
